

Currently, there are two databases developed by the National Science Council of Humanities and Social Research Center: The “Taiwan Social Sciences Citation Index” (TSSCI) and “Taiwan Humanities Citation Index” (THCI) are used as main foundation. After these are categorized, it will be expanded and enhanced mainly with the NCL’s “National Digital Library of Theses and Dissertation in Taiwan” and “Online Public Access Catalog.”

The function and content of this database are different from other commercially used databases. Through the power of the public sector to ensure academic autonomy to nearby public, this database accomplishes the goal of social responsibility for inquiry and usage of the academic world and the public in general.

■ Safeguarding Freedom to Read: “Library War” Movie Preview

“Books Team (librarians) is the future guardians.” This is a dialogue from the Play representing that librarians are the “guardians” and “heritage agents” of human knowledge and civilization.

The movie “Library Wars” is adapted from the best-selling novel in Japan authored by Hiroshi Nakagawa entitled “Library Wars.” The movie preview was sponsored by the National Central Library, the Library Association of the Republic of China (Taiwan) and the film producer, Tien Ma Xing Kong digital film company.

The film preview took place on the 2nd of September at 2 pm in the NCL International Conference Hall in the midst of fervor and enthusiasm.

Invited to the film preview were library directors from all types of library from all over the country as well as librarians, professors and students from library information department of universities. The venue was fully packed.

In the welcome speech of NCL Director General Tseng Shu-hsien, she said “in this movie, librarians are called to come forward and defend the legal basis and practice of preservation of reading and the freedom to read. This is an occasion for fellow library community to rethink and scrutinize library related regulations.

The theme of the movie should trigger significant discussions among students from library information science department of the various universities. Through the movie that conveys the firm attitude on the care and maintenance of the freedom of reading, the role of the library in the society in guarding and defending the right to read is worth the effort to once again rethink and ponder seriously by the library world.
