literati painting and calligraphy of the Song dynasty and focused on the period following the great achievements of Su Shi and his circle leading from the late Northern Song into the early years of the Southern Song. Two artists were of particular concern: Mi Youren, the son of the famous calligrapher and connoisseur Mi Fu, and Sima Huai, the grandson of the famous statesman Sima Guang. For the literati, however, jiaxue was less about livelihood and more about self-definition. These scholar-officials were concerned about who they were within the structure of their family lineage, and how they were perceived, adding an important and complex dimension to our study of Chinese art.

In March 2008, the Center for Chinese Studies and College of Liberal Arts at National Taiwan University, College of Liberal Arts at National Chung Hsing University, and Institute of Chinese Literature and Philosophy at Academia Sinica jointly held the "International Conference on the Cultural Interpretations of Mobility." A total of 25 papers was presented at the conference by scholars from the United States, Australia, Japan, Taiwan and other countries. The conference formed an editorial board to compile the papers for publication and resulted in two volumes entitled Space and Cultural Places: Cultural Interpretations of Mobility and Space and Cultural Places: Imagery, Practice and Social Production. Both volumes were published by the Center for Chinese Studies in October 2009.

Cultural Interpretations of Mobility brings together nine papers presented by Kawai Kozo, Tsao Shuchuan, Wang Ayling, Li Waiyee, Stephen H. West, Cheng Yuyu, Liao Chaoheng, Liu Yuanju, and Emma J.
