News from Taiwan Libraries

■ An Internet Book Reservation Service

Kaohsiung Public Library provides an internet book reservation service linking all 3.5 million publications at the library's 60 greater Kaohsiung branches into a single giant collection. The service is available to all Kaohsiung City residents, even in remote areas, providing readers with seamless book borrowing service. Readers can apply for books online, in-person at a library, or by phone, fax or e-mail and pick up requested books at their branch of choice within five days. The library also sends an e-mail notice to reader to pick up the requested books within five days, offering a whole new level of convenience. (Information Provided by the Promotion Division of Kaohsiung Public Library)

■ Flowers, Books and Mazu Street Tour: Let's All Read Good Books Activity

Due to its unique administrative position, Nantou City is home to public libraries at three administrative levels: county library, (the Taiwan Provincial Library), and city library, adding to the diverse cultural role played by libraries in the city. In order to further promote reading, the Nantou City Public Library teamed up with Nantou's Cishan Temple to jointly hold a centennial religious celebration called "Flowers, Books and Mazu Street Tour: Let's All Read Good Books Activity" on September 18, 2011. (Information Provided by the Director-general of Nantou City Public Library)

■ Solar Library and Energy-Optimized House

The Taipei Public Library Solar Library and Energy-Optimized House (Solar LEO House) opened at the end of October 2011. This two-floor green building has a library on the first floor and an energy conservation exhibition hall on the second floor. The specifications and dimensions of the building were carefully designed to maximize energy efficiency, from the window size, floor height, and insulation materials to considerations of the climate, wind direction, temperature and humidity of Youth Park and other factors.
